Comments (under 200 words)	In slide 13, of the Traffic Safety Toolbox presentation regarding the NTMP Tools chart, DOT indicates that armed enforcement of traffic violations is a "soft measure" while classifying "road narrowing" as a "restrictive"/extreme measure. This seems disconnected from the larger conversation that our society is having about policing and racial justice. Regarding traffic safety, it's hard to fathom that having a representative of the state armed with a gun is a "soft" tactic and yet paint is a "restrictive"/extreme tactic. I think the two tactics should be flipped in their placement in the chart. This status quo logic prevents us from addressing the defining issue of American society.

PS. I look forward to TAC discussing the roll that armed traffic enforcement plays in Pasadena transportation policies and whether or not armed enforcement is even effective and or supported by data.

Comments (under 200 words) Thank you to DOT staff for preparing the presentation on a Traffic Safety Toolbox. One place where some of these traffic calming measures could be applied is to the Villa Street "Greenway" described in the 2015 Bicycle Action Plan. This is an important East-West corridor, that would extend the existing bike lane, and create a connection between the four North-South Greenways currently in development. I recommend adding the Villa Street Greenway to the list of Greenways to be developed. Clearly, many of the measures in the Traffic Safety Toolbox would work well along this corridor.
